

Vienna commemorates Art Nouveau and Modernism and its most famous proponents: Klimt, Schiele, Wagner and Moser amongst others all through 2018. Numerous exhibitions will illustrate how artists, scientists, architects and many others had a lasting impact on Vienna in the years around 1900.

"Whether your heart beats for bold patterns or bold ideas, straight lines or straight talking, complex psyches or complex music: a radical mindset is key to enjoying Vienna 1900."

There are exhibitions that concentrate on Gustav Klimt – my favorite is the Beethoven Frieze by Klimt at the Secession Building – overwhelming! There is a fabulous exhibition at the Belvedere showing all works by Egon Schiele . Just to name a few.

There is much to see about the Wiener Werkstätte - established by Koloman Moser and Josef Hoffmann in 1903. It can be best described as a production community of visual arts. (There was a great exhibit of the Wiener Werkstätte at the Neue Gallerie in NYC).

However, this being Vienna, one can see much of this great Art Nouveau (Jugend Stil) in public places: such as the row of fabulous apartment houses on Linke Wienzeile (4th dist.), the subway station Karlsplatz (designed by Otto Wagner), the Secession Building (which we Viennese lovingly call "Krauthäuptl"-cabbage head), the Austrian Postal Savings Bank (Otto Wagner) and the church on Steinhof (again Otto Wagner).

The Majolikahaus

At Wienzeile 40 in Vienna, the Majolikahaus was built in 1898. The façade is clad in majolica tiles by Wienerberger, decorated with floral motifs.
